Eco schools photo competition

Take a fresh look at your environment. What is it that makes you 'Love where you live'?

Can you take a photograph that communicates the natural character of your local area and the importance of looking after it? Photographs will be judged in two categories:

- local landscape and wildlife
- people having an impact on where we live

There is a prize pot of £10,000 and a top prize of £3,750. The best photographs will be exhibited at the Birmingham Botanical gardens in April 2010.

Entries can be uploaded to the competition website via the link above and should be accompanied by short caption of no more than 20 words. Please send an additional copy of entries to Mr J Turner for display in school. Email: jturner@imberhorne.co.uk

This is a national competition open to all amateur photographers (incl. parents & teachers!) and is being run in conjunction with Alupro, a not for profit organisation who provide aid in Malawi using the money raised from recycling Aluminium cans, foil & aerosols. Closing date is Feb 28th 2010 so there's plenty of time to get snapping!

Take a fresh look at your local environment
What is it that makes you love where you live ?

Can you take a photograph which will communicate to exhibition visitors the essential natural characteristics of your area, and the importance of looking after it - particularly as we face up to climate change ?

If so you are in line to win £3,750 as our national winner, or one of the other prizes in the £10,000 prize pot.

Your pictures can show good things or bad, be beautiful, funny or shocking. The important thing is that you communicate your vision of caring for the natural world, and the impact of human behaviour on the health of the planet.
